Supplementary question 3

Suppose we had two hot bodies (e.g., like light-bulb filaments) emitting light. Do you think you could use a beamsplitter to combine the emitted light power from these two so that you could heat up another object (e.g., another light bulb filament) to a hotter temperature? If so, how would you do it? If not, why could you not do it?